EXETER HAPPENINGS.

Political Situation Continues To Increase In Interest.

Academy's New Halls Will Soon Be Ready For Occupancy.

Budget of Other Timely Topics From Our Special Correspondent.

Exeter, Oct. 7.

As the time approaches for the republican caucus the political situation gradually assumes working proportions. William P. Chadwick, who, it was generally hoped, might go to the constitutional convention, has notified the committee he is not a candidate, previous engagements necessitating his absence from the state at the time of the meeting of that body. Henry C. Field, who was also prominently mentioned for a place on that delegation, has likewise signified an intention not to be a candidate. The list is therefore reduced to Attorney General Eastman, Arthur A. Fuller, William H. C. Pollansby and Dr. A. S. Wetherell, and these gentlemen will in all probability be the delegates chosen. The delegation is understood to favor a reduction in the numbers of the house and an increase of the senate. As for representatives there are five active candidates now in the field, John H. Fellows having, it is understood, withdrawn from the contest. These five consist of three of last term's delegation—Dr. A. T. Severance, Leonard F. Smith and Edward E. Nowell—and John Scammon of the firm of Eastman & Hollis and Gen. Stephen H. Gale. But four can be returned, and whether the precedent followed by Exeter for many years of sending its representatives two terms shall at this time be broken, or whether one of the two new men shall be left, is the question agitating the voters. General Gale, by his open letter and by public and private statements, wishes it clearly understood that the issue on which he seeks nomination is license vs. prohibition, and the vote Thursday is likely to demonstrate Exeter's attitude on the subject from a republican standpoint. The other candidates are believed to favor radical changes in the present prohibitory statute, though it is doubtful if either has determined what form such changes should take.

This noon was the latest time allowed prospective candidates to have their names printed on the official ballot prepared by the executive committee, and this evening and the afternoon and evening of Wednesday the committee will be in session for the purpose of correcting the republican checklist.

The republican checklist for the caucus on Thursday night has been posted and it contains about 750 names. The republican executive committee will be in session at the club rooms this evening from 7:30 to 9 o'clock. Also on Wednesday from 3 to 5 o'clock and from 7:30 to 9 o'clock to make corrections.

Work is progressing fast on the academy's new halls—Merrill, Alumni and Hoyt. Merrill hall will very soon be ready for occupancy. Alumni hall has progressed far enough so its beauty can be seen. It is probably the handsomest building of the academy's set. Work has been commenced on the fourth story of Hoyt hall.

The death of Miss Elizabeth Boardman, for many years a resident of Exeter, occurred at her home in Brookline, Mass., last Friday. Burial was at Greenlawn cemetery, Salem, Mass., this afternoon.

Coach Carroll D. Swain of the Phillips Exeter football team has gone to New York on business.

THIS AIRSHIP WILL FLY.

Is England to claim the honor of the first flying machine that really flies? While Santos Dumont is still planning to complete his machine and Prot Stevenson of America is making futile attempts to lift his aerodrome off the ground, Stanley Spencer, a British sky skipper, who has already made a flight of thirty miles over London, claims his invention is a perfect success in every particular.

MR. HACKETT COMING.

Former Assistant Secretary of Navy to Speak for Republicans.

Concord, Oct. 6.—It is officially announced this evening that Frank W. Hackett, formerly assistant secretary of the navy, is to take part in the republican speaking campaign in this state. He will be in New Hampshire for a week or ten days, and will appear on the stump during the last of the campaign.

On Thursday, Oct. 30, N. J. Rachel, F. W. Currier and Mr. Maxham, the campaign vocalist, are to be at Milford. George H. Lyman, collector of ports at Boston, will also speak in this state during this campaign.

It is hard to realize that more than three-fourths of the year 1902 has passed.

RANDOM GOSSIP.

"Wodoman, spare that tree!" won't be a popular poem this season.

The Newfields correspondent of the Exeter News-Letter writes: "The singing school recently organized by Miss Eva Goodrich promises to be a howling success," which is certainly more pat than polite.

William E. Storer and William Philbrick were at York Nubble on Monday and secured about forty sea birds. The coast birds are now beginning to come in thick and some excellent bags are reported.

October is not beginning well in the matter of Sundays. There is a popular belief to the effect that if it rains on the first Sunday of the month it will rain every Sunday but one during the month. September kept the saying good, and now the first Sunday in October was a rainy day.

The long continued wet weather and the high winds are fast robbing the trees of their wealth of foliage. The colors have been most brilliant, well repaying the colorist who takes a trip into the country, by carriage, wheel, trolley or train, for the purpose of feasting the eyes on the varied color combinations.

The voting quarters of ward one are pretty restricted just at present, even in spite of the new edict which has gone forth denying admission to all but "legal" voters in that ancient ward. In view of this some changes in the building have been recommended, such as the tearing down of one or two partitions and the removal of some fire apparatus now in disuse, but still occupying valuable room. It is possible that these changes may be made suddenly some day, for there is some slight prospect of an overturn in ward one politics before the children attain many years growth.—Local correspondent.

There will soon be a vacancy on the Fitz John Porter statue committee, caused by the removal from this city to Haverhill of Councilman Carlisle (Clark). The committee has no power to fill Mr. Clark's place and the new member will probably be appointed by the city council.

The death of Hon. Frank Jones is a decided loss to the trotting horse interests. He was a firm friend of the trotting horse, and few men have done more to popularize harness sport. He had gathered together at Maplewood farm a grand lot of breeding animals, and there is little doubt that, had he lived, the farm would have taken high rank among the breeding establishments of the country. Mr. Jones was a liberal purchaser of trotting stock, and his racing stable has met with excellent success.

Associated together in flocks, side by side we now find chickadees, juncos, red-breasted nuthatches, blackpoll warblers, magnolia warblers, myrtle warblers, yellow palm warblers, golden-crowned kinglets and brown creepers. The chickadees are the most interesting and withal the commonest fall birds. They chase each other in a romping way from branch to branch and seek their food from bark and leaves of trees and pine cones, hanging head downward just as noddily as standing and looking inquiringly at you while they sing their name. The junco is the slate-colored snowbird and will stay north all winter, though mostly preferring a climate somewhat milder than that of Maine. The nuthatches, too, are very late fall birds and a few may stay during the cold weather in southern New England, though mostly going to the Carolinas and further south. The blackpoll and the magnolia warblers will go to Central and South America.

"About this time" bulbs, for winter blooming, should be planted in pots. Begin fixing them now, and continue at intervals until the last of October, if you want blossoms throughout the winter. Set the bulbs in the pots in a mixture of leaf mold garden soil and fertilizer, having the tops of the bulbs near the surface or protruding just a little above, and set the pots in a semi-dark place until they begin to grow. This allows them to form plenty of strong roots. Then bring them to the light.

The vast number of telegrams, and several cablegrams, that have been received from all parts of the country, expressing sympathy with the family of Mr. Jones, indicate only too well the wide extent of the man's friendships and how firm they were.

It is hard work not to speak our minds on the coal question—over and over again, but, come to think of it, what a sensation a newspaper might make today by publishing an entire issue without using in it once the word "coal" or anything about it. As it is, the dailies are about all coal.

Remarks a writer in the Boston Courier: "I rather think that many people can lay claim to eligibility to membership in the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution only on the ground that their ancestors 'murdered the King's English.'"

Gray squirrels are unusually thick in the woods on the outskirts of the city this fall. Large numbers have been shot in the past few days. Part-ridges are said to be pretty plentiful, also. A young fellow of sixteen was out Saturday not more than a mile from the city and shot three part-ridges and four squirrels.

The order of "Conferree" has been conferred upon O. L. Frisbee by the Order of Pequot and King Philip. This order is conferred only upon the most worthy descendants of the men of faith and iron, who in warfare, not alone with the Aborigines of New England, but with the elements, stood as a hero the fierce birth of the nation. The membership descends to the oldest son, is limited, and no application will be received. The insignia of the order is made of solid gold and is very handsome. It is as follows: Obverse—Upon two arrows saltire or an open Bay Psalm-book in fess, crossed in dexter bend by a matchlock purpure, and resting upon the trunk of a fallen tree, the whole surrounded by the legend "Praelium Virtutis Avorum." Reverse—Upon a landscape of snow-clad pine trees upon an Indian shield, garnished with feathers and bound with thongs or the bust of King Philip of Pokanoket, in full dress, grasping an uplifted tomahawk in his dexter hand, flanked by the legend "Order of Pequot and King Philip" in base point, a pipe of peace purpure. The whole is suspended from a ribbon purpure by a belt of wampum.

Several hundred people went to Harmony Grove cemetery this morning, to see the beautiful flowers that are heaped around the grave of Mr. Jones. These flowers will be kept fresh as long as possible, that all who desire to gaze upon them may have ample time to do so. The wonderful richness and variety of the display excites universal admiration.

Comments are still being made on the patient manner in which the great throng of townspeople stood outside the Middle street church, on Monday afternoon, until the reserved seats had all been occupied, before they sought admission to the funeral.

HIGH PRAISE FOR MILDRED HOLLAND.

The management of Music hall is sparing neither time nor expense to secure for its patrons the very best attractions in the country. In the return engagement of Mildred Holland and her excellent company in The Power Behind the Throne, a genuine dramatic treat is promised theatre-goers. It is not the policy of the present management to endorse any actor or actress unless it knows whereof it speaks, but from reports from local house managers throughout the country, the management of Music hall is justified in recommending Miss Holland to its theatre-goers. The indications are that every seat in the house will be occupied on Thursday evening next. The production is sumptuously staged and costumed. The principal members of the supporting company are practically the same as last season, comprising Lillian Norris, Frances Brooke, Rita O'Neil, Adrienne LaSalle, Anna Gail, Edwin C. Gallagher, Samuel Lewis, Del La Barre, Kenneth Davenport, Carter Weaver, Herman Hirschberg and many others. The sale of seats began this morning.

HE IS SUFFERING.

The President's Condition
Causes Some Anxiety.

His Physicians Command Absolute
Rest And Quiet.

Strain Of The Past Week Has Been Very Trying.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 6.—President Roosevelt has suffered from the strain of the past few days. He is not able to stand much more strain without danger. If Mitchell will do what the president asks, Roosevelt will see to it that the miners get justice, if he has to make public the interviews between Governor Stone and himself later. But if Mitchell will not put his men back and trust to the president's word of honor to do all that he can do, the strike must go on, so far as the sick man in the White house is concerned, until his advisers can draw up some plan to submit to congress.

The president's doctors think that he has suffered no great harm from the excitement of the last few days—unless by moving around as much as he has done; a blood clot may have been dislodged and may have entered a vein.

Even then the clot may be dissolved by mechanical action. But if the president does not keep quiet; if a clot of blood gets up near the heart or brain; if that clot gets lodged across a blood vessel or in the arteries of the heart; then the president would be in very serious danger. In many cases of that kind, death has followed almost instantly.

Fortunately there are no indications of any danger of "embolism," as it is called, so far. The chances are that there is no danger, if the president will only keep quiet for a few days. President Roosevelt will not review the parade of the G. A. R. at which it was expected he would occupy the reviewing stand in front of the White house. The official statement issued last night that he would have to exercise extreme care indicated that it would be impossible for him to review the veterans, and the direct statement that he will not do so was made on an official authority. The president has not been able to rest his foot on the floor and the physicians have forbidden him again to overtax his strength as he did during the past week.

OPENING CEREMONIES.

Beginning Of Thirty-Sixth Annual Encampment Of G. A. R.

Washington, Oct. 6.—Ceremonies incident to the beginning of the thirty-sixth annual encampment of the G. A. R. were held today. The only formal proceeding was the dedication of Camp Roosevelt, the tent city on the White house grounds. The ceremonies consisted of addresses by men of national reputation, a speech being delivered by Secretary Hay.

BANKRUPTCY CASES.

Eight More During Last Six Months Than In Preceding Period.

Concord, Oct. 5.—Burns P. Hodgman, clerk of the United States district court for the district of New Hampshire, has just completed his report of bankruptcy cases for the six months ending Sept. 30, 1902, for the use of the attorney-general in preparing bankruptcy statistics for the United States. The report furnishes some interesting figures, showing the total number of cases instituted in New Hampshire since the passage of the present bankruptcy act, July 1, 1898, to be 702, of which an even 100 have been commenced in the last six months.

Of the total number of cases, 645 are voluntary petitions, while 57 are involuntary cases; that is, cases in which creditors seek to have debtors adjudged bankrupt. Of the 100 new cases, 86 are voluntary petitions.

The report shows that 72 discharges have been granted and four compositions confirmed since March 31 last.

Of the 100 petitioners, 54 are classed as laborers, 17 merchants, 10 manufacturers, 9 farmers, 4 lumbermen, 2 physicians, 1 druggist, 1 innkeeper, 1 liveryman and 1 contractor.

Only two women filed petitions in the last half year. The number of cases for the last six months is greater by eight than the number filed in the same months for the year 1901.

BARGAIN IN CAR RIDES.

"Every time I see a large assemblage of people in a large city, such as the coming Grand Army encampment at Washington," said an old Washingtonian the other day, "it recalls to my mind a little incident which took place in front of the Post building some years ago. It was during the Christian Endeavor convention and the city of course was crowded. There was a large contingent of folk from the country, the real plain people, who form the bulwark of the nation."

"All wanted to see the sights, quite naturally, and some of them were trying to go through on a very small margin financially, and besides probably had been warned to look out for the man with the golden brick. A party of six, both men and women, came out of the Post building one afternoon, and a tall, raw-boned old man with a patriarchal beard rushed out across the plaza and hailed a passing Fourteenth street car."

"Say, mister," he cried brandishing his weather-beaten umbrella at the driver, "what'll you take us up to Mount Pleasant for?" "How many are there of you?" "Six," came the answer. "Well, I'll take you up for five cents apiece," said the driver, smiling benevolently at the bucolic group.

"I'll go you," responded the countryman, and with the triumphant air of a woman who has just made a bargain counter look like three lead dimes, he shouted back to his party: "He'll take us up for five cents apiece. Come on," and they all scrambled in among the amused passengers.

"It's dollars to doughnuts that those folk who were running up against the wiles of city life never learned that the bargain they struck cost them five cents more than six tickets would have fetched out of their exchequer."—Washington Post.

THE DESK SLAVE'S SONG.

O this is the song of the man who's chained
All day to the roll-top desk;
Who, sweltering over a type-machine,
Assumeth a shape grotesque
The breeze and the sunshine are not for him.

The sky is a mere hearsay;
He sits and he grinds 'mid the rustling sheets
Through all of the dull, dull day.
He thinks of the days when his hands were hard,

His arms like the best of steel,
He thinks of the days when his lithe limbs made
Good time on a racing wheel;
He thinks of the days when he held his own.

In the harvesting of grain—
Then smiles at the thought that a croquet game
Can give him a next-day pain
He sighs to remember the mighty brawn.

He showed on the college track;
He thinks of the day when he played baseball,
And wishes those days were back;
He thinks of himself in a football suit
Well padded and picturesque,
Then weeps o'er recalling the flabby form.

That's chained to the roll-top desk.
Oh man in the field with the hoe on plow,
O man with the ditching spade!
Yearn not for the "easy white-handed job"

Instead of your sturdy trade,
There's money sometimes—in the office grind—
There's life in the work you do!
You are fanned and warmed by the breeze and sun

And arched by a roof of blue.
Your food is the food of a hungry
man,
You sleep like the dead at night;
Your muscles are firm and your heart is good.

Your cause is the cause of right;
We slaves of the desk would renounce our hope
Of wealth or a "raise" in pay
If we could feel as we used to feel
Back there in that "husky" day.

MEXICAN WAR VETERANS.

We marched with Wool across Chihuahua's range.

We were encamped with Worth at Monterey.

With Fremont trod a path unknown and strange.

With gallant Kearney pushed to Santa Fe.

Along that route where once our legions fought.

In memory's silent pale again we tread.

But in its pale there comes this sombre thought!

A simple remnant's left—the legion's dead.

Thirty-three of the men who marched and fought in the war with Mexico fifty-five years ago met in reunion last week in Columbia. When they left Missouri, more than half a century ago, the most of them were beardless boys. Now not a one of the thirty-three is less than seventy-four years old, and one of them, M. P. Leutz of Fulton, Mo., is eighty-six years old.—Kansas City Star.

If you want to make the best use of any old hats that you may have, you should take them to the Nicobar Islands. There you will be received with enthusiasm, for the people who live in those islands have quite a passion for them. Every one likes them, and every one tries to get as many as he can. On a fine morning the sea roundabout these islands may be seen dotted with canoes in each of which is a savage, with nothing at all on but a strip of cloth round his waist and a tall hat, and the funny part of it is that old hats are very much more sought after than new ones. The Nicobar natives regard new hats with suspicion and dislike.

Persian Customs. In Persia, as well as in Turkey and throughout the Orient generally, modern waterworks are unknown, and in every Persian town the women and girls may be seen at daybreak on their way to the common wells just as in old Bible times. They carry their pitchers on their shoulders and bring water for the household uses of the day. The well is the general clearing house for news. Another common sight in Persian towns is the tea seller. He carries a big brass teapot in either hand, the one full of hot water, the other of tea. His cups are in a tray, which is fastened to his belt. He cries in a singsong tone: "Hot tea! Sweet tea! Tea of crimson color!" His tea is prepared with herbs and has a delicious thymy odor. Wine is carried about in beedskins, which, plumped out to their original form by the fluid within, present a startling appearance to the novice. It is one of the impossible things for the western barbarian to attain admission to the Persian royal harem, but the rage for photographs has penetrated even that sequestered spot, and photographers have lately been admitted for the purpose of photographing the royal infants.—New York Tribune.

Plants and Gravitation.

The sense of gravitation in plants is that sense, for example, that makes a pine tree grow straight upward. A plant that curves assumes that position because its sense of gravitation makes it take the one best suited to its needs. Some flower stalks are very curiously guided by the gravitation sense. The narcissus is an example. At first there is a straight shaft piercing the ground with its compact pointed flower bud, but as the flower opens the stalk bends close to the top and brings the flower tube into a roughly horizontal position, where it shows off its bright colored crown to attract the insects, on the visits of which it depends for fertilization. The flowers are guided to the right position by the gravitation sense, and they increase or diminish the angular bend in their stalk until the right position is attained.

Hugo and the Poets.

"One day," said Turgeneff in his "Reminiscences," "we were discussing German poetry. Victor Hugo, who did not like others to monopolize the talk when he was by, interrupted me with a disquisition upon Goethe. 'His best work,' he remarked in an Olympian tone, 'is "Wallenstein." "Pardon me, cher maitre, "Wallenstein" is not Goethe's, but Schiller's.' "No matter; I have read neither of these authors, but I understand their spirit better than those who know them by heart." "What could I reply?"

Cheerful Prospect.

Patient—Tell me candidly, doctor, do you think I'll pull through?
Doctor—Oh, you are bound to get well. You can't help yourself. The Medical Record shows that out of a hundred cases like yours one recovers invariably.
"That's a cheerful prospect."
"What more do you want? I've treated ninety-nine cases, and every one of them died. Why, man alive, you can't die if you try! There's no humbug about statistics!"

Sagacious Bird.

Mexico has a clever bird, called the mehnarpes, which has discovered a use for the telegraph pole. At the foot of the post this bird makes a large hole, in which it rears its family. Some what higher up the post it makes an observatory, from which bored holes permit it to observe the horizon in every direction. Still higher this sagacious bird makes its storehouse, and thus the pole serves as its home, fortress and warehouse.

Instinct of the Muddish.

The remarkable instinct of the mud-fish to roll himself in a ball of mud when the dry season approaches is a wonderful provision of nature intended solely, it would seem, to prevent the extinction of the species. The most interesting fact about this fish is that it breathes my means of its gills when in its native element and by means of lungs during its voluntary imprisonment in the mud cocoon.

Changed View.

"He's dreadfully disagreeable and boorish."
"Tut, tut, my dear. He used to be, but he is no longer."
"How is that?"
"Why, since he has become famous we have decided to consider him only delightfully eccentric and original."—Chicago Post.

Relative Importance.

"And you really think that the political boss of your party is a greater man than Henry Clay?"
"Well," answered the candidate, "I won't exactly say he's greater, but he has a great deal more influence with the people with whom I am doing business at present."—Washington Star.

Put the Paint on Himself.

The Plasterer—I thought you were working on old Kay's new house?
The Painter—So I was, but we had a row, and he said he'd put the rest of the paint on himself.
The Plasterer—And did he?
The Painter—Yes; at least that's where he put most of it.

TUESDAY, OCT. 7, 1902.

Beyond question the coal magnates, by their curt refusal to accept the plan of arbitration proposed by John Mitchell at the conference with President Roosevelt, and their failure to suggest any other feasible plan to which they would agree, have lost the favor of many whose sympathies had previously been with them rather than with the striking miners. Their objection to "recognizing" the miners' union, which is controlled by the bituminous coal miners, as a regulating power in the anthracite fields, of which the bituminous interest is a rival, is not without weight; but their offer to treat with their operatives personally, and if an agreement cannot be reached in any case to submit the question to the nearest common pleas judge for arbitration, was puerile. It is manifestly absurd to demand that the miners present their cases as individuals; they must be allowed to be represented by a committee of some kind, and a committee having authority to at least make a temporary settlement, even if it becomes permanent a vote of the miners had to be subsequently taken. The officers of the local unions would seem to be a proper committee, and they could be accepted, apparently, without "recognizing" either Mitchell or the United Mine Workers in the sense so repugnant to the operators. In refusing the terms suggested by Mitchell without proposing any substitute save the practically unconditional surrender of the strikers, it appears to us that the coal magnates seriously damaged their own case.

"We advocate the national ownership and operation of the anthracite coal mines," is the plain positive declaration of a convention held at Saratoga, New York, last week. It was a socialist convention, either, but the democratic state convention of the most important state in the Union—the state that leads all others in population, in wealth and in manufactures. This plank does not reach quite so far as the platform of the social-labor party, adopted at New York in 1886, which demanded "that the United States obtain possession of the mines, railroads, canals, telegraphs, telephones, and all other means of public transportation and communication," but it reaches a long way in the same direction—toward the ideal republic of the extreme socialists, in which all agencies of production and distribution, which includes farms, forests, factories, mills, stores and ships as well as railroads and coal mines and pretty much everything else, are to be owned by the public in general and nobody in particular. That plank, as far as it goes, is as plainly socialist as it is plainly worded, and would be counted good timber for platform building by any socialist convention. Perhaps the democracy will follow the Hon. David Bennett Hill and his state convention into the ranks of the socialists; but if they do, what is to become of the ancient democratic dogma of state sovereignty, to maintain the principles of which the party in 1861 plunged the nation into a war that cost hundreds of thousands of lives and thousands of millions of dollars? State rights and state socialism are as repugnant to each other as oil and water.

There are loud demands from not a few persons in various walks of life, and some of them persons of prominence and influence, that the president at once use the national authority to seize and operate the coal mines in the interest of the public, to end the present serious condition consequent on the shortage of coal, and avert the appalling condition of distress that must result if the cessation of coal mining continues through the winter. The conditions confronting the people wherever anthracite coal has been depended on for fuel are indeed of the gravest character, and whatever can lawfully be done by the president, who has demonstrated that he possesses high moral as well as physical courage, to remedy matters before the conditions become disastrous, will unquestionably be done; but if he was to follow this advice to seize the mines with the national forces there would arise such a city of "Caesarism," "man on horseback," "usurper," "military despot" and "destroyer of American liberty" as would make the welkin ring, and among the most clamorous advocates of the impeachment and removal from office of the usurping "dictator" would be found many of the persons who are now loudest in demanding that he assume that role. It is of vital importance to many people and industries that coal mining be promptly resumed; it is of vital importance to the nation's existence that to attain this desirable end the principles on which the government was founded and under which the nation has existed for a century and a quarter, be not set aside during a fit of hysterics. Certain able lawyers say that congress could constitutionally pass a law authorizing and directing the temporary seizure and operation of the mines as a matter of public necessity; but no such law is now in existence.

CAMPAIGN FIRE FOR NEW HAMPSHIRE VOTERS.

The leading cotton manufacturing states of the south are North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The following table gives the number of spindles in them for 1890 and 1900:

	1890.	1900.
North Carolina	337,786	1,133,432
South Carolina	332,784	1,431,349
Georgia	445,452	815,545

Totals 1,116,022 3,380,326

It will be seen that the increase in the above three states was more than 300 per cent. during that period.

The accumulated gold supply in the United States treasury at the present time amounts to $564,391,693, more than half the supply of the entire country. It is said to be the largest amount of gold ever stored away at any one time in the history of the world. It is more by a hundred millions than all the gold in the British isles, nearly as much as all the gold in France and about three-quarters of the amount in Germany.

There is no denying that success begets success, and the people of a community should be thankful for any successful enterprise, for they may rest assured that its example will be emulated by others, bringing increased prosperity and wealth to the community. The people of any section should esteem it a privilege, as well as a duty, to encourage and support all enterprises that promise to make that section rich and powerful.

—Textile Excelsior.
In an article entitled "Spirit of Democracy" in the democratic campaign book is the statement that "the duty of democracy is to fight the republicanism of a few lines below is the further statement that 'most of the newspapers of the country, nearly all of the magazines, not a few public and the majority of the colleges' are with the republican party." The inference is plain: Democracy's mission is to fight the press, the pulpit and the schools of the country.

The mercantile agencies report business conditions perfect for continued prosperity throughout the country, the coal strike being the only drawback.

The democratic congressional campaign committee is short of money, short of speakers, short of arguments, and soon will be short of votes.

The reason the democratic orators are shouting "imperialism and trusts" with such vim is to down the echoing of the sound of the empty dinner pails made during the administration of Grover Cleveland.

The protective tariff, practically created and supports our enormous plate industry.

The cause of industrial combination is business conditions, not the protective tariff, except in so far as it creates the conditions.

Perhaps Free Trade would kill the trusts; perhaps not. But it would severely hurt many American industries and cut down the earning opportunities of labor. Remember 1894.

Republican policies like ingots of gold, can be coined into currency, to meet the pressing needs of the day.

GRACE GEORGE.

Winsome Actress Who Will Star In A Play
This Season.

Grace George, the delightful impersonator of dainty feminine roles, who had such a long run at the Republic theatre, New York, last year, has a new role in which to surprise the American public once more.

Silver is too fluctuating, and as unreliable as democratic policies or promises.

Every time Uncle Sam acquires a bit of new territory, some old fossil shouts himself black in the face trying to show, for political effect, that poor Samuel is in his dotage and has been uncoined. It was so at the time of the Alaska purchase and more recently. The Alaska matter has turned out all right and our other assets will be paying investments when some of our "anti-imperialistic" friends are forgotten.

If President Roosevelt were a demagogue he would promise to wipe out the trusts, raise wages in the coal mines and secure equal incomes for the hustler and the laggard—but the president is too honest to promise the impossible and the people respect him all the more because he is.

M. Caix declares that it is no longer necessary for the United States to proclaim the Monroe Doctrine. On the contrary, the world is beginning to realize that since the Spanish American war a page of history has been turned and the world's Americanization has begun.

WALTER J. BALLARD

A NAME FOR JOHNSON.

It appears that the Minneapolis Tribune has been rebuked for calling Tom L. Johnson a socialist. It says that both the Single-Taxers and the Socialists have objected to the application of the term to him, the former because they want to claim him for themselves, and the latter because his views do not coincide altogether with theirs.

The Tribune confesses that in the face of these objections it seems a little difficult to find the proper word to describe Mr. Johnson's political status, but it makes another attempt and in its own estimation at least it has succeeded.

It directs attention to some of the doings of Mr. Johnson. As a private owner of street railway franchises, he made a large fortune out of five-cent fares. Then he sold his railway stock and at once became a furious agitator for three-cent fares and public ownership of franchises for the operation of street railways.

He held large interests in iron and coal mines, mills, factories, and other industries by means of which his party says the combines rob the people with the aid of the tariff. These interests he is likewise said to have sold, and now he shouts for free trade and against the trusts with the rest of the chorus.

Having set forth these facts, the Tribune says:

"He claims high public virtue for assailing the very industrial institutions by which he gained the money he has salted down to support him in his campaign. Having secured his own profits against assault on property engaged in industry and the public service, he takes the lead in this assault, with political advancement as the goal of his ambition. It doesn't seem to be necessary to hunt for any other label for Mr. Tom Johnson than the good old Athenian word of demagogue."

Of course, Mr. Johnson and his friends will not accept this name, but others will give the Tribune credit for having selected a term that is more appropriate than any other that could be applied.

IMPERIAL GALLANTRY.

How the pleasant eccentricities of one generation will persist in breaking out in another, defying time and ridiculing the change of manners. It was the playful way of Frederick the Great when he came across a burlesque wench to marry her forthwith to the tallest of his grenadiers, and it stands to the credit of his intuition that these marriages rarely proved a failure. Now, either in emulation of his great predecessor or else because he cannot help it, the kaiser has just had a similar attack of gallantry—gallantry, mark you, on a truly imperial scale. He was visiting Crefeld lately, that busy town of silks and velvets on the lower Rhine, and learned from the pretty girl inhabitants that all they wanted in the world was a handful of lieutenants to dance with them. Hey, presto! the autocratic mandate has gone forth that Crefeld is to have its garrison in the shape of a hussar regiment, and the burgomaster is busy preparing for accommodations. The regiment is lucky if it is not christened in future Fraunhusaren, or, worst of all, Tanswehr.—Pall Mall Gazette.

BRADSTREET'S TRADE REPORT.

Bradstreet's New Hampshire trade report for the past week says:

Business conditions throughout the state continue to be generally good. All kinds of labor are well employed and a scarcity of help is reported in some parts. Purchases from wholesalers have improved, but the rainy weather of the past week has tended to make retail trade rather poor. The fuel question seems to be a serious one; a large number of manufacturing concerns have used nearly all they had in stock, with no prospects of a new supply. One concern in Nashua has already been compelled to shut down from that cause. Wood is in great demand, with prices advancing rapidly. At Portsmouth business is very good, the navy yard is working overtime, and work on the new paper mill is being pushed rapidly; a large amount of building is being done. Banks report a large increase in deposits. The new electric road between Portsmouth and Exeter is running. Exeter manufacturers are busy; retail trade fair.

'T WAS NOT TURNED ON.

The New York News tells this story:

"A professor was going to experiment with laughing gas when he overheard a student say that if he were selected for a subject he would take advantage of his supposed coma to tell the professor what he thought of him. When the class met the professor announced that he would like, for the purpose of illustration, to administer the gas to some member of the class. Forthwith the student volunteered. The gas bulb was connected with his mouth. He pretended to be very much excited and began to abuse the professor and call him all sorts of names. The old man let him go on for a while; but the class roared when the professor said: 'He needn't be so irresponsible—the gas has not been turned on yet!'"

A LETTER FROM MR. HACKETT.

He Gives Expression To The Regret In Washington At Mr. Jones' Death.

The following letter from Hon. Frank W. Hackett of Washington was received by a member of Mr. Jones' family. It gives one of the best analyses of Mr. Jones' character that has yet been published, and expresses the regret at his death which is felt all over the country.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 4.

We at Washington, learn of Mr. Jones' death with feelings of profound sorrow. How he will be missed. I am going to ask you to express to Mrs. Jones, and the family and intimate friends, my sincere sympathy at this time of their affliction.

Mrs. Hackett is abroad; if she were here she would join heartily with me in this message. Not long ago Mrs. Hackett rode from Portsmouth to Boston in the next seat to Mr. Jones. He entered into conversation, and it so happened (much to Mrs. Hackett's gratification) that he told her much of his early life and experiences. I recall the fact that Mrs. Hackett spoke of the incident, as revealing something of the character of a very remarkable man.

As you know, I have always felt a deep interest in all that has to do with Portsmouth. For years I have watched the career of him who has gone—and admired his transcendent ability. He had a genius for business, and his success was due to the wonderful knowledge that he possessed of men and of the springs of human nature. He exhibited the same power that we see in the great general—the great statesman.

But I need not speak of his ability. There are monuments of it on every hand in the good, old town where he found his home—a home that he loved.

I will say a word of one of his personal traits, and it is something that made me like the man more than he ever suspected.

I refer to his gratitude to my father, of which he spoke to me more than once. My father saw in Mr. Jones the powers of a successful man of business. When Mr. Jones—young and struggling wanted to borrow money of the bank of which my father was president—some of the directors were inclined to shake their heads; but my father offered to endorse his note, and I think it was—at all events, he made it a personal matter, and helped Mr. Jones—as an older man of standing can help a young man. Mr. Jones proved to be a valuable customer at the bank. He never forgot the encouragement that he received at my father's hands; and to me he spoke of it in terms that made me very happy. There was always (so long as my father lived) a mutual respect between the two.

Another trait, equally creditable to Mr. Jones, was his strong attachment to Portsmouth. He never seemed to tire in praising his town. He sought its material advancement—and took pride in improving its buildings and streets—in adding to and developing its resources.

He was, as I have reason to know, a good friend to the navy yard—and Portsmouth, in her long record of faithful sons—has had no one more intensely loyal, no one who has accomplished more for her welfare.

There should be some suitable memorial record made of the life and character of Frank Jones—that future generations may know what manner of man he was, and how much for the half century he has stood for in behalf of the city of his adoption.

Yours truly,
FRANK W. HACKETT.

MEETING OF JONES AGENTS.

Brief but appropriate addresses were made by J. Hewett of Lancaster, P. F. of Lawrence, Mass., and Messrs. Stratton of Milford, Mass., Torrey of Newfields and Meade of Salem, Mass.

Whereas, We, the agents of the Frank Jones Brewing company, have heard with profound regret of the death of the Hon. Frank Jones, therefore be it
